

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION

2024'S NEW LAWS WILL REQUIRE YOU TO REAPPLY FOR THE EXEMPTION

Texas homeowners may have received notices that they need to reapply for their homestead exemption. The reapplication requirement is due to a new law, Senate Bill 1801, that requires Texas appraisal districts to create processes to make a periodic review of all homestead exemptions and check them at least once every five years.

The new law requires appraisal districts to have these new processes in place by January 2024. Homestead exemption holders will be asked to reapply for their exemption to confirm that they still qualify, including providing a current copy of their Texas driver's license showing the same address as the property listed in the homestead exemption.

Starting in 2024, the law will affect all properties, and therefore homeowners will not owe for previous years if they incorrectly filed for a homestead exemption.

Many of the appraisal websites allow you to preemptively reapply by visiting the corresponding district websites. Appraisal districts have sent and will continue sending out notices to advise homeowners of the new requirements.
